Monitoring minority rights in Europe

Elisabeth Sándor-Szalay, Prof. HC

university professor, director

University of Pécs

Dept. for International and European Law

Centre for European Research and Education

Abstract: Europe is a striking example of diversity. National and/or ethnic minorities and linguistic communities are present in significant numbers in virtually every European country. History has taught us that we must recognize, value, and protect our communities both at the national and international levels. In this endeavour, European monitoring mechanisms that view diversity management through an independent and expert lens play a key role. These are the issues that will be the core of this keynote speech.
